

Karl Young

I have been a trustee for six years. It has been both a duty and a privilege to care for what we all love and value, to care for something that is an important part of our lives and something we believe is essential to the world. We give hope a reality; we show the world how inspirational and joyful our human diversity truly is. Here, we are not afraid of our differences — we celebrate them as the creative strength of humanity. We each hold slightly different understandings of what LIME is and what it means to the world, but we all agree that it is vital and essential.

Over these years, I have learnt how important it is to ask questions, even when it feels foolish. Trustees are not expected to be lawyers, accountants, or marketing professionals. But we are expected to listen, to understand, and to ask the questions that help us make the right decisions. This is a responsibility that I, and many others, have taken seriously over the years.

It has also been a privilege to witness the hard and dedicated work of our volunteers and staff and I find it deeply humbling. I want to preserve this spirit and help shape a path for our future. That is what motivates me, and it is why I am asking the members for a final third term as your trustee.